COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Let's define globalization as the ongoing expansion and logical consequences of the 19th and 20th century capitalist market revolution, during which epoch the emergent philosophies and sciences of early modern European and Anglo-American origin were applied to social production in every sector, including the state, agriculture and manufacturing. In this class students encounter the world globalization is producing and learn to theorize and study it through a series of thought provoking ethnographic essays and films. The films put us into the presence of peoples and places impacted by globalization, helping us learn how to study them first hand using ethnographic methods. The essays are exemplary attempts to study such peoples and places and to write ethnographically about the local impacts of global forces, as well reveal the power of local peoples and places to understand and resist the destructive effects of globalization. Each student will produce a professional research proposal for their own global ethnography.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS:

I. ATTENDANCE and participation in both lecture and discussion section are mandatory. Your thoughtful engagement with the materials, your classmates, and the class content will be necessary to earn an A in this class. 10 points per session = 100 points.

II. Students will read, analyze, and submit three two-page, single-spaced BRIEFS on the articles, as specified week by week below. Questions to be addressed in the briefs will be distributed in class. The first brief will be on introductory articles that theorize the method. Subsequent briefs will engage both theoretical articles and recent ethnographic studies. A mandatory format for the briefs is indicated at the end of this syllabus (see sample brief). The first two briefs are worth 30 points, the third is worth 40 points = 100 points total. Due dates are specified below. No late briefs accepted.

III. Each student will produce a RESEARCH PROPOSAL for a global ethnography that discusses 1) your proposed field study site(s); 2) your central research question(s); 3) your chosen methods; 4) at least five preliminary interview questions; 5) the conceptual tools you will need and recording technologies you will utilize; 6) the people with whom you plan to talk; 7) how you expect to gain access to them and entrance to your ethnographic site; 8) the formal writing/ethnographic story you plan to produce; 9) a bibliography of at least five theoretical and five historical sources, and 10) a completed human subjects review form. This document will be between eight and ten pages in length, double-spaced, 12 point font, Times New Roman, not including end notes, bibliography, and relevant appendices. The final project is worth 100 points.
Your proposal will include the following section headings and relevant discussions:

a) Statement of the problem introducing the ethnographic site(s) of your choice; this section identifies the place(s) you will study and poses the research problems and question(s);

b) Research hypotheses based on a review of theoretical sources, previous academic and popular literature on the subject, and an historical assessment of the site’s relevant social processes, subjects, and cultures to be investigated;

c) Background historical analysis of the research problem and site; description of the ethnographic site based on historical study; exploratory fieldwork and/or initial contact with or observation of possible interviewees or research subjects; visual documentation of the site(s); and description and/or presentation of relevant archival materials.

d) Methods of study to be used. This is where you propose to actually do the ethnography—a description the actions you will take, your reasons for taking them, and your goals as an ethnographer, including a description of the time you will require and the funds necessary to carry the project to completion.

e) Discussion of possible findings and the Significance of Research.

f) Bibliography.

g) Human Subjects Review form.

IV. Each student will also maintain a FILM JOURNAL of analytic reflections on all films and media shown or distributed in class. Your journal is due on Wednesday March 14, 2006. As films will be presented each week there will be one entry in the journal for every class meeting. It will discuss the films, connect them to the readings, relate them to the ethnographic methods we discuss, and answer study questions presented in class. 100 points.

[Week by week trajectory]

Week #1. January 10.

[Key CONCEPTS: Ethnography]
Week #2. January 17.

READING:

[Key CONCEPTS: History; Local and Global; The extended case study method; global forces, connections, and imaginations; Capitalism]

BRIEF #1 DUE [readings 1 - 8]

READING:

SCREENING: Life and Debt. Stephanie Black.

READING:

SCREENING: Global Assembly Line  [60 minutes]

Week #5. February 7.

BRIEF #2 DUE. [reading 9 - 15]

READING:

SCREENING: WallMart: Is it Good For America? [60 Minutes]

Week #6. February 14.

READING:

Week #7.  February 21.

READING:

Week #8.  February 28.

BRIEF # 3 DUE. [readings 16 - 22]

READING:

Screening and discussion:
Redwood Timber War films; clips.

Week #9.  March 7.

READING.

Screening and discussion:
The Fourth World War.

Week #10.  March 14.

FILM JOURNALS DUE
Workshop: Finishing the Proposal.

Week #11.  — Final Research Proposal Due —